

INPATIENT PROGRAMS

Supervised, Clinical Support for Complex Addictions

Designed for those who need medical intervention or a structured environment to abstain from substance use, inpatient treatment is a personalized combination of programs that can include detox, rehab, residential treatment and group therapy.

Detoxification (Detox)

Designed for patients likely to experience serious withdrawal complications, detox is a medically managed service. Patients are medically stabilized and detoxified under 24-hour professional supervision. A comprehensive evaluation is conducted during this stage of treatment to determine the appropriate course for ongoing care. Unique evidence-based, complementary therapies such as Acudetox (acupuncture) are available.

Rehabilitation (Rehab)

By providing a structured inpatient environment, rehab services combine the efforts of a multidisciplinary team with group therapy to meet the specific needs of men, women, young adults or adolescents in the early stages of recovery or after relapse.

Long-Term Residential Treatment

Long-term residential treatment is designed for patients who no longer require medical observation, but still require a structured environment in order to abstain from using drugs and alcohol. Involvement in group therapy continues during residential treatment.

Odyssey: For Young Men Ages 19-24

The Odyssey Program is designed for a time when young men are learning how to launch into adulthood by gaining responsibility and independent skills. The program is still highly structured, but also designed to add some time for self-direction. This program includes all levels of care and group therapy.

Star Behavioral Health

In affiliation with Star Behavioral Health, we provide specific therapeutic services for Indiana National Guard soldiers and airmen who are seeking help for problems with alcohol and other drugs.
